For 15 years, Phoenix House has helped thousands of women reunite with their families, rebuild relationships, and establish healthy, independent lives in Los Angeles County. At Santa Fe Springs, we offer a specialized residential program that respond to the unique needs of women struggling with drug and alcohol abuse and their related problems. Our program features gender-responsive, trauma-informed, family-focused treatment, education and vocational training, skill building, and transitional living. Outreach and aftercare for maintaining recovery are a part of our continuum of care that includes:

- Residential treatment for substance abuse and mental health disorders for single women and women with children, in a comfortable facility with a large playground and garden
- Additional services, including education, childcare, parenting classes, employment readiness, and referrals for specialized services
- Outreach and advocacy in the community
- Aftercare support to ensure continuing recovery in the community

Our residential program in Santa Fe Springs is designed to help women prepare for self-sufficient, drug-free lives. We focus on the individual woman's treatment needs. Our services include case management, individual counseling, evidence-based group counseling, mental health services, trauma services, family therapy, educational and vocational training, and more. Our program empowers women to: develop better communication and coping skills, improve parenting skills, resolve trauma issues, obtain housing, and seek work or enroll in educational classes.

In Santa Fe Springs, women participate in treatment while living with their children, and pregnant women find recovery in a nurturing environment with pre- and post-natal support. Phoenix House residential substance abuse treatment program for adults is licensed by the California Department of Alcohol and Drug Programs and fully accredited by CARF – the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities (2010-2013).
